April 18, 2018 – Yesterday, the first of a series of planned national injury websites – Free-Injury-Help.com – was officially unveiled.

In keeping with our mission – “We’re here to grow and serve our communities” – the site was announced last night in Mesquite, Texas, by Dr. Tim Lehmann at a local, community educational event.

The new site represents the culmination of years of research and development in the arena of balanced, multi-faceted, Best Injury Practices Standards™ – an ongoing development project led by our company.

The purpose of the new community site is simple.

It’s to serve as an evolving, consumer-education-and-protection resource for standards-based injury practitioners located nationwide.

Put another way, it’s to foster and facilitate community-based, consumer education and protection initiatives by practitioners desiring to assist their communities in such fashion.

Our commitment is also likewise simple.

If through our efforts with community leaders, organizations, and businesses, we can help even one family avoid the potentially-debilitating effects of an auto accident, then our efforts here will have been worth it.

We wish to thank Dr. Lehmann and all of our Strategic Partners for their hard work at all stages of this endeavor. The work you are doing is monumental and we simply cannot thank you enough.
